Smith's fan convectors go hand-in-hand with heat pumps

As heat pumps become more and more viable as alternatives to fossil-fuel powered boilers as the principal heat generator in both domestic and commercial applications Smith's fan convector technology provides an efficient solution for heating buildings.

Inherent in the heat pump's design is that the smaller the temperature between the heat source pump and the heat sink/emitter the higher the energy efficiency of that heat pump.

Fan convectors can work very effectively at system temperatures as low as 40°C. This allows the heat pump to work close to its maximum levels of efficiency, which means it will reduce the user's energy costs and consumption, and carbon emissions, in the way it was intended.

- Smith's fan convectors can work with Flow temperatures as low as 40°C
- Superior response time compared to radiators or underfloor heating, so is far better equipped where intermittent usage is a factor
- Lower water content in fan convectors than UFH or radiators mean 10% energy usage savings
- Used in conjunction with Smith's Smart Controls increases efficiency and versatility
